Amy is the spitin' image of her mother, Julie- blond hair, blue eyes and vivacious. Her father, Mark, is a doctor in Town, Mississippi. Soon after her fifth birthday Amy is found to have leukemia and undergoes chemotherapy at St .Jude Children's Research Hospital. Sympathetic support from friends and efforts from doctors and nurses culminate in cure of the leukemia. Months after recovery from leukemia Amy becomes ill again. She now has AIDS acquired from a blood transfusion. More devastating than the disease is the social isolation that follows. Tragically, Amy dwindles to emaciation and demise. Mark is so heartbroken by Amy's death that he leaves his practice to train in AIDS research. The transition from a country doctor in a small Southern town to a fellow in training and later faculty member at the Johns Hopkins University School Medicine includes social, cultural and academic hurdles he overcomes to achieve success in AIDS research.
