Boy, I'll tell you ... life ... Just when things were going wonderful, someone had the nerve to start stalking Danielle. But that's not what appalls Danielle the most, what really appalls her is that Malcolm lied about the identity of this certain someone. So now, just when Danielle was on the right track in life, she may have an attempted murder rap hanging over her head ... and the attempt was on the wrong person! If it's not one thing, it's another. Now, with the weight of her guilty conscious and the buzz of slight contact high (don't ask) she's paranoid. Actually, she's beyond paranoid. Therefore, Danielle does the only thing an attempted murderer should do in this position: She runs. Malcolm told Red's ass to let him handle everything. Didn't he? Now, not only does he have to find Laura, who has gone missing, he has to find Red, who's on the run ... with Rena and Georgie. Poor Georgie. So once again, Malcolm is on the hunt for Red ... unfortunately for her, he's not the only one. Jon knew that Malcolm was nothing but trouble. And now that everyone knows that Laura's home was owned by Malcolm, the media is speculating a love triangle may have caused that little fire. Jon knew all along that Malcolm had other women, he's just glad it's all out in the open now. In regards to Danny, Malcolm doesn't need to worry about where she is. Danny's with him. Oh, and by the way: Laura. Is. Pissed.
