The Battle of Plattsburg, Vol. 2: A Study in and of the War of 1812 (Classic Reprint) John Meloy Stahl
In the War of 1812 both our soldiers and our sailors fought as well as soldiers and sailors have fought through any war in the history of the world. Notwithstanding the apocryphal increment made by the centuries to the deeds of ancient warriors, or the enhancement of the valor of other warriors by the cunning of the writers of romance rather often in the guise of history no soldiers or sailors, of any people or any age, have fought better than the soldiers and sailors that have fought under the Star Spangled Banner (or its colonial prototypes) from the first day of the War of the Revolution to this day; and when the odds were not greatly against them, they have needed no messenger of defeat. The War of 1812 does not furnish an exception. In fact, it might be contended that the battles of Plattsburg and New Orleans, in both of which our soldiers proved far more than a match, man for man, for Wellington's seasoned and best soldiers, showed the most skillful and resourceful fighting done on this continent; and inferior to none anywhere in the history of war in bravery or brilliancy of achievement.
