This anthology of Greek vases, 'composed to please the eye', discusses and illustrates many of the thousands of Greek vases that survive in a remarkably good state of preservation in museum collections around the world. With such a large format, the book is able, in many cases, to present larger than life colour photographs of complete vases as well as individual scenes. The vases are presented thematically, covering the banquet, love and seduction, athletics, warriors and heroes, rites of passage and death, men and gods, the dangerous exploits of Herakles, Athenians, and Dionysus and his followers. The vases are accompanied by a very readable and informative narrative that discusses the choice of subject, its execution and its significance within the wider context of Greek society and culture.
