Lily Pierson's life has been turned upside down. Now a single mother raising her seven-year-old twins, and finishing up a long and painful divorce, she's ready to get her life back on track. Distractions are not welcome. Especially in the form of Adam Byrne, her brother's best friend. A constant figure in her life, who's been absent recently. But he won't leave her thoughts, nor will the kiss they shared when they were kids. A kiss he doesn't remember. Adam Byrne's life is finally where it should be. After an injury took away his dream of playing professional hockey, and his father passed away, Adam found himself running the family bar. Years later and finally happy in his new role, he decides to expand the business. He's been avoiding Lily, but she's the best realtor in town, so he enlists her help, knowing that the more time they spend together, the harder it will be to fight what's between them. Can Lily truly let go and give love another chance? Can Adam find happiness with the woman who has been there all along? Could this be their Last Call for love? This is an 80,000 word novel with a HEA and NO cliffhanger! Can be read as a standalone. Readers 18+
