In his prison diary entry of September 3, 1942 - his fifth month of captivity - Dr. Thomas Hays casually refers to the espionage ring he has established in Manilla and which he runs from within prison walls: "St. M. [a civilian agent] is back in Manilla, but any contact for the time being is completely cut off. We must wait for a break... I knew of her return by a prearranged signal - a mark on the truck bringing wood into camp. I watched for the mark every day and today it was there." Bilibid Prison, within the city of Manila, served as a clearinghouse for prisoners of war on their way between other camps in the Philippines. From behind its high, guarded walls, Cdr. Thomas Hayes, USN, was able to oversee an espionage ring as well as head the medical team and hospital staff.
