The places and characters in the stories encompass a fairly broad spectrum of society and culture, and they span an extended time period. Each story has a moral and a message, which are delivered directly, or at times, more cleverly. In all cases, the reader is asked to accompany the characters on a fantastic and mysterious journey. Some storylines are simple and straightforward, while others are more complex and contain hidden messages. All represent a certain aspect of faith and the temptations and obstacles we face as Christians. Most of the stories include the persona of the “Old Man” who intercedes in the course of human events, sometimes very strongly and sometimes more subtly. His real identity is left to the reader’s imagination.
